This Athlete Couldn't Raise His Feet Off the Ground, but by Pure Grit and Perseverance He Became the World's Title Holder.

T was a cold, raw day in early spring.
Rain was falling. In the middle of a great, half-filled stadium, a little knot of athletes gathered. At one side stood a tall, loose-limbed man in athletic cutume with a wet, soggy sweater thrown over his shoulders. Drops of blood trickled from his lips and dropped sowly down on his white athletic shirt end the red cross bars of the American shield that adorned a spot directly over his heart. The man's face was white and grim. He didn't notice the blood. He was centering his thoughts steadily upon his next exertion. An Olympic championship was at stake-and honors for Uncle Sam.

Closely the man watched his nearest rival, a Greek, as he cleared the bar in the standing jump. The Greek and of the Wassash"—his favorite and only equalled the American's best effort up to tune.

"Raise the bar to 5 feet 2 incnes; I've still got another try," said the American as he took his position.

Clutching one hand at his side he jumped and cleared the stick. The championship was his. He had won his tenth Olympic title.

Ray Ewry, the greatest amateur

Ray Ewry, the greatest amateur standing jumper the world has ever known, was the man. That very morning he had ruptured his left kidney in the preliminary trials. For hours after he had sat huddled and bleeding at the mouth in a dark dressing room of the stadium at London, not knowing what had befailen him and afraid to speak of it for fear he would be ordered to the hotel and not be allowed to compete in the finals.

Ewry Always a Fighter.

Perseverance and dogged will had always been one of Ewry's strongest characteristics. They pulled important the strong of the other fellows that I wouldn't feel the Jar as hedly as they did.

"I was the inventive kid then. I had the loss fire engine and the finest hose cart in the town; always had spare wheels for wagons and a small pile driver built in my backyard. We had a big lawn in front of the house, and it was my job to keep it clean. The fellows would come around and ask to play with my toys. Well, you can bet there weren't many times I did the trans cutting by my lonesome. Tom savyer wouldn't have had anything on me in those days.

When he was a youngster.

When he was twenty-two years of age-he's thirty-seven now and preparing for his twenty-first year in competition—he was injured while playing football at Purdue College at Lafayette. Ind. Infection set in and it was thought he would lose his left arm. Fever followed, and Ewry wasted away until he was unable to even walk about. After spending three months in bed the doctor got him up one day and gave him a tryout. A few steps and the young fellow tell to the floor.

The little resobushes are grafted on the strong, splendid root of a manetta plant, and from this root they draw a life and strength that rosebushes grown in any other way do not have.

These are dug up and put in cold storage and shipped to the United States while the little bushes are still asleep; and they're asleep now, though it is time to plant them; But when they are once in the soil and feel the sun they will come to life. Rosebushes planted now should bloom this Summer.
